Should be finding under C:\Program Files\Activation\p8 Thanks a lot A: p8 is "Windows 8.1 Pro or Enterprise" product activation package that may be installed on Windows 8/8.1 and Windows Server 2012 R2 SP1/SP2. The activation process that is running in your machine is different from the activation process that is being used in Windows 8/8.1 and Windows Server 2012 R2 SP1/SP2. The activation process that is being used in Windows 8/8.1 and Windows Server 2012 R2 SP1/SP2 is different and that is why you are seeing different activation keys. Now, we have to find out why you are finding v28 keys in the C:\Program Files\Activation directory. It would be nice if you also post the locations that you are finding these keys in the Windows registry. Once that is done, we may be able to figure out exactly which activation process is being used in Windows 8.1/Windows Server 2012 R2 SP1 and which process is being used in your machine. New Search /p8/OpenContentClass.Pages Monday, June 27, 2016 Mental Monday I want to talk about lots of things and will probably do so for quite a while, but I hope that I'm not too boring. I've always been the sort of person that tries to keep my excitement and enthusiasm in check, but I have two major worries that sometimes carry me down. The first is perfectionism. I'm not very good at self-criticism, and I'm constantly afraid that I'm not doing things "right." I constantly feel this pressure to be perfect, to do things better than I've done them before, and I'm very aware that I never will. Partly it's out of the desire to be better, but it's also out of the fear that I'll disappoint my mom because no one loves me more than my mom does and I don't want to hurt her. The other major worry that I have is about being a perfectionist. That's funny, because I have no problem being "perfect" because when I'm not being "perfect," I'm at least being "good." There are a lot of other people that seem to have a problem being imperfect. I guess that they can't stand the thought of letting people down. I'm not there at all. I'm totally okay with people not liking me. It's something that I'm not entirely proud of, but I like people. It's one of the few things I do like about myself. I have to make a lot of effort to pretend that I do like myself 82138339de
