I was never one to use it on the phone for anything, and from my experience I can just about say the same for people that do. What would you use it for? A few dollars a month, per user at least, for a small area for a few locals. Small M2M project? Do you have any links to how people have used it? I know there has to be some, but I haven't seen it. This interactive screensaver features characters from the Back To The Future trilogy movies as they drive around the world through time. There are two modes to the screen saver; "Hover mode" - which is the default mode and "Interactive mode".

In "Hover mode" the screen saver floats above the desktop as if on clouds. It is possible to interact with it, such as move it with a mouse cursor, click on locations on the screen saver or press keys on your keyboard. We have included five "tokens" in our production; Doc Brown, Marty McFly, Biff, Mrs. Brown, and a Hover DeLorean. You can interact with each of them individually. Please note: you can not interact with all five at the same time. When you run the screen saver it will switch back to "Hover mode" so you can interact with the screen saver. You can switch between "Hover mode" and "Interactive mode" at any time during the screen saver by clicking on the icon in the bottom right of the desktop. Screen saver runs in 1680x1050 resolution. It is recommended that you keep the "Click to Start" program icon in the system tray and be able to start the program at any time by just clicking on the icon. -->

This version of the screen saver includes some stability issues related to the Click to Start technology. It may fail to start (crashes or stops responding) at times. Internet connection. If you don't, then the Click to Start program may not work. To give the Click to Start program permission to use your internet connection you must follow the instructions in the Read Me file. If you have any problems with the screen saver, please send me an email for help.
